Vaughan states:

"Anyone who has ever coached realizes the sacrifices your wife and family make for you to follow your passion. Kathy and our daughters did that for me. So much time is necessary to be a teacher and coach and they gave that time to me. I am so appreciative but also carry some guilt. They will never realize how much that has meant to me. We are all shaped by those who touch our lives. So many have done that for me. I tried to pattern much of my teaching and coaching after John Wooden. His basketball philosophy and lessons on life profoundly influenced me. I was fortunate to be around him at clinics and other personal situations, learning from him."

Vaughan on his players:

"How do you evaluate coaching success without thanking your players? They also made the commitment, were dedicated and put in the hard work. They made all the baskets, they passed out the assists, they pulled down the rebounds and they played the tough defense to make our teams successful. Finally, the most constant and dependable asset in my life was God. His guidance and support were unwavered to a sinful human being. I thank him for always being there for me. Any success I had, goes to him!"
